On the contrary, he stated on numerous occasions that the German people, if defeated, would be unworthy to survive the struggle. More will be said of this in the next chapter. The Institute also had a cascading generator which Stalin considered to be viable. While the bulk of the German forces fought valiantly, the complete failure of the individual units shows that the morale of the German troops was no longer uniformly high. Later that morning, corps commander General Helmuth Weidling signed the order of surrender, which was then conveyed to all soldiers of the Berlin garrison. Table of Contents Expand.
