Ironically, she is welcomed now as a writer acclaimed for the very topics for which she was banished 40 years ago. Lessing understands the absurdity of this group, on two levels: first, as the participants themselves understand, but try hard to ignore, the absurdity of a small group of middle-class whites forming a communist party in a country where the working class is entirely black, and where whites have no way of meeting blacks on common ground; and secondly, as the participants do not understand, Stalinism has already undermined the ideals which they are devoting themselves to.
